Electric Picnic campsite to feature free launderette - with dancefloor (obviously)

Summer festivals are known to feature mud, along with the headline acts. The press likes nothing better than a photo of people caked from head to foot in the stuff, so news that this year's Electric Picnic festival in Ireland featured a giant launderette comes as a blow.

Organisers say the Surf Laundry Club was "the place to go to scrub up and make sure the weekend is spent looking, and smelling, fresh" - a traditionally rare state for most festival-goers to find themselves in.

Anyone who washed their clothes was given a jumpsuit while waiting, and were invited to throw some shapes on the feature every launderette should have - the dance floor.

Kathryn Dodd of the shopper marketing homecare category, Surf Brand, said: "This is the first time a full service launderette has been available to attendees at Electric Picnic and Surf is delighted to be able to offer a home comfort at a festival that often ends up leaving music fans in need of freshening up!"

Gloves are off

One of England's most ancient guilds aims to ensure that its time-honoured trade has a bright future. Young designers - including talented University of Huddersfield fashion students - are playing a key role.

Every year, The Worshipful Company of Glovers of London - which dates from the early 1300s - holds a glove design competition for students. In 2015, there were 11 entries from first-year students from the fashion design with marketing and production and the fashion design with textiles degree courses.

The scale of this entry was enough in itself to win an award. When fashion lecturer and first-year tutor Debbie Allsop attended the prize-giving ceremony in London, she was handed a special certificate and a silver salver for the greatest contribution to the 2015 contest.

Also present was first-year fashion design with textiles student Stephanie Rockliff, who received a prize as runner-up in one of the contest's categories.

Weapons of moth destruction

The battle against moths is relentless and Caraselle aims to be in the frontline with an arsenal of moth killers.

Caraselle is the exclusive suppliers to drycleaners of the extremely successful range of Acana moth killers - they now have seven Acana products available.

Graham Warren at Caraselle says: "We are seeing an unprecedented level of demand for moth products with many drycleaners now really getting behind the problem by stocking our Acana range.

"We offer them our best-selling book about moths 'What's Eating You', their own unique customised moth map and very graphic posters for them to focus on the problem and the solutions. We can provide counter display units and also a new floor standing 'Acana Moth Station' for those shops which sell high volumes.

Now Caraselle and Acana have introduced a brand new deluxe range of Modelli moth killers. There are three fragrances in both sachets and hanging units.

Modelli is fully compliant with all insecticide regulations, gentle on clothes, fabrics and senses. The products feature the Acana indication system to tell the customer when to renew the items.
